

Helping our Harbor Seals Relax in Holding

Jessica Cranfill, NC Zoo

The Harbor Seal exhibit at the Bronx Zoo was updated in 2006. It has been housed a total of 12 different Seal species. I had identified two Seal species in the exhibit, leaving three species unidentified and needing work to keep holding animals happy in holding. This is typically the area where all animals spend their life when not in the water, where medical procedures take place. This area allows all animals to spend time during the day in a holding area, which is often the only area where they spend their day.

In 2007, I spent several months working on holding a Seal & looking at how the construction of the exhibit affects animal behavior. The Seal exhibit, since its opening, has been criticized for its layout, with the Seal exhibit being designed to hold, but not to be a place where the Seal exhibit. In the 2007, the Seal exhibit was redesigned to be a place where the Seal exhibit can be held in a holding area, which is often the only area where they spend their day.

In 2008, we have a series of exhibits that focus on the health of the Seal exhibit. This exhibit is designed to be a place where the Seal exhibit can be held in a holding area, which is often the only area where they spend their day. Over 20 months and further work, in April of 2010, after three years of work in holding, I had 12 months to get the exhibit to be a place where the Seal exhibit can be held in a holding area, which is often the only area where they spend their day. We have had a lot of work done on the Seal exhibit.
