Cloverlanes Bowl
in Livonia

Rhinos have lived on earth for over 50 million years, but whether they survive even 50 years more is open to speculation. Only 5 rhino species exist today when once there were over 100 species. The 5 species- White, Black, Indian, Sumatran, and Javan- are all endangered.

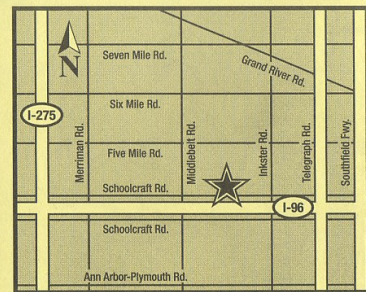

Bowling For Rhinos is organized by volunteers, who donate their time and skills to help raise money to send directly to the places in need. Since all the people involved are volunteers, 100% of all donations are sent directly to these rhino conservation areas!

In Kenya we support the Lewa Wildlife Conservancy where our donations help protect both Black and White Rhinos and most of the other animals native to East Africa. In Indonesia, AAZK supports the remaining Javan Rhinos at Ujung Kulon National Park and the Sumatran Rhinos in Bukit Barisan Selatan and Way Kambas National Parks.

Over 40 AAZK chapters participate throughout the U.S. raising over $200,000 annually. The Detroit Chapter of AAZK has been an active participant in Bowling for Rhinos since 1990. To date, we have raised over $100,000 for this charity. With your help, we can continue to help keep these species alive!

Bowling for rhinos | Fund-raiser benefits conservation efforts

BY LINDA ANN CHOMIN
STAFF WRITER

BILL BRESLER | STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Little 7 month old Lucee Wilson sits next to the skull of Rudy, a black rhino who used to live at the Detroit Zoo. Her mother Barbie Wilson is a former zookeeper who coordinates the annual Bowling for Rhinos fund-raiser.

Detroit zoo keepers were practically cheering when they heard director Ron Kagan announce the arrival of two rhinos next spring.

For the last several years, they'd worked hard to save the last of the endangered species by throwing the Bowling for Rhinos fund-raiser at Cloverlanes in Livonia.

Part of a national effort by the American Association of Zoo Keepers, the Detroit Chapter held its 2004 bowl July 23, raising $18,000. The money goes to Lewa Wildlife Conservancy in Kenya, Africa, and Ujung Kulon National Park and Bukit Barisan Selatan National Park in Indonesia.

Lewa currently is home to 32 black rhinos, 33 white rhinos and 25 percent of the world's population of the endangered Grevy's zebra. Ujung Kulon is home to the last 47 Javan rhinos. Bukit Barisan Selatan is home to 20-40 Sumatran rhinos, the most critically endangered of all rhino species. Only 300 exist in the world.

"When we started, it was really small with 20 bowlers," said Barbie Wilson, a former mammal zoo keeper coordinating the event since 2000. Wilson, who's originally from Westland, was running from task to task with 7-month-old daughter Lucee on her hip.

"It's been growing bigger and bigger. I left the zoo when I had the baby, but it's still important to me. 100 percent goes to the rhinos. We donate our time. Once you read the statistics it's alarming. It also does help the elephants. It's for the rhinos, but it helps all of the animals."

Patti Miles is very familiar with the statistics even though her primary job is taking care of Wanda and Winky, the elephants leaving the zoo in September. Of the more than 100 species of rhinos once known to exist, five remain and all are endangered.

"In the 1980s, they predicted by year 2000 rhinos would be entirely extinct, but because of fund-raisers like this and parks protecting them, they're safe and increasing in numbers," said Miles, who grew up in Livonia. "Poaching is a problem; horns are believed to have medicinal qualities. Encroachment is the biggest problem that endangers most animals. They're just running out of land.

"We would love to see the
